Dear Elder Pinegar,

I have just received the booklet "Culture for Missionaries: Guatemalan Indians" and find it very interesting and generally helpful. The general instructions and information concerning missionaries in foreign countries and the history of Guatemala are very useful. Also the information of how to approach people and how one should respect their way of life and beliefs is very helpful.

Most of the booklet treating of the indians in the mountains does not pertain to this mission. Our investigators are Latins or Indians who have been living in the cities, know Spanish and have accepted the customs generally of the Latins. We also have the costal farming areas which have laborers of Indian decent but who have mostly become apart of the culture of the finca owners.

We thank you for the great work of orienting the new elders. We only wish our Latin missionaries had equal opportunity as in many instances they need it even more.

Sincerely your brother,

Willard I. Skousen, President

EDITOR'S COMMENTS

Culture for Missionaries: Guatemala Indians is a well-developed, interestingly-written text which performs well the important function of creating for the missionaries a positive outlook toward their mission among a people whom they most likely knew nothing of before their call. The writer chooses well the details he includes to present the history, the traditions, and the outlook of the Indians of Guatemala. The writer expresses himself competently, smoothly, and clearly; the text should prove quite helpful to those preparing to carry the gospel to the Indians of Guatemala.

Sincerely,

Barbara R. Hume
